

Ready

It is a given for Christians that every life is of value and every person loved by our Lord. Clarence was significant to God when he was born, when he was in school, when he worked, when he became a husband and then a father. But he was just as prized when his health declined. To us who knew him in better times, we remember a dedicated Christian man who served as a deacon, who helped maintain the building and was a cheerful presence at worship.

Clarence was an example of perseverance during years-long physical trials. His love for his children, grandchildren and especially his dear wife Vivian never faltered. He appreciated his church family and loved being at church. Clarence and Vivian are a living testimony of marital love through good times and bad.

Though Clarence's passing was unexpected, he was ready. There are many unimportant things we can fill our lives with. There are only two or three things you truly need to get right. Clarence did. He was a Christian man, a husband and a father. In eternity everything else will fade.
